

H1

Horizontal · the edited card

The landing page, shrunk to a card: the name being edited, with the line underneath. The one to hand someone who has never heard of you.

FRONT

BACK

H2

Horizontal · the staff badge

The ID cards from the About page, at card size. Black band, department tag, barcode. People keep this one because it doesn't look like a visiting card.

BACK

H3

Horizontal · dry mode

The same card with the jokes switched off. No red, no handwriting. For a bank, a government office, or a client who hasn't laughed since 2019.

BACK

V1

Vertical · the edited card

The stacked wordmark, still being edited, with the line under it. The vertical twin of H1.

FRONT

BACK

V2

Vertical · the correction

The card corrects itself before anyone else can: Business card struck out, visiting card written in. It is the whole brand in one gesture.

BACK

V3

Vertical · dry mode

Dry mode, upright. Wordmark, the five things we do, the details. Nothing else.

FRONT

BACK

H4

Horizontal · the five things

The list, set like the landing page, with the red pen round one of them. Print five versions with a different word circled and hand over whichever one fits the person in front of you: same card, five different opening lines.

BACK

H5

Horizontal · the answer

The sentence is the card. Shortened to two clauses, with the rest of it written underneath in pen. Best for someone who already knows the name and wants to know what you sell.

FRONT

If it has words, we write it. If it needs a website, we build it.

anything else? usually yes.

Horizontal · dry, with the list

Wordmark, the five things, the sentence, a hairline. No red, no handwriting.

FRONT

BACK

V4

Vertical · the to-do list

The hero's to-do list, ticked. Five things done in red, one box left open: Anything else? The pen answers underneath.

V5

Vertical · the five things, upright

The same list standing up, with the shortest version of the line under it and the margin rule on the back.

FRONT

BACK

V6

Vertical · dry, with the list

Upright, ink only: wordmark, the five things, the sentence.

FRONT

BACK

H7

Horizontal · wall to wall

The name set so large it runs off both edges. Nothing else on the front but the five things, small, along the bottom. The loudest card that still behaves.

BACK

H8

Horizontal · reversed

Solid ink, the name in paper white, the caret in red. Loud through contrast rather than size, and the one that looks most expensive in the hand.

BACK

H9

Horizontal · red

The loudest of the lot: a red card with the name knocked out of it. It breaks our own rule that red is a pen and not a fill, so it is a deliberate exception, not a new habit. Use it for the founder's card, not the whole team's.

BACK

H10

Horizontal · the drafts

The three names from the opening animation, two struck out, the third ticked. The name appears three times, and by the end of reading it nobody forgets it.

BACK

V7

Vertical · stacked, wall to wall

The stacked wordmark blown up until it bleeds off both sides, mid-edit. Vertical, and very hard to ignore.

FRONT

BACK

V8

Vertical · reversed

Ink card, name in paper, the five things underneath. The upright twin of H8.
