

06 • THE PAGE

A notebook with a margin.

Paper down the middle, a red rule, and the notes written in the margin beside it.

LAYOUT

Page width	max 1240px
Side padding	clamp(20px, 5vw, 64px)
Margin column	clamp(200px, 22vw, 280px)
Column gap	clamp(32px, 4.5vw, 64px)
The margin rule	1px, Margin pink, full height
Corner radius	4px buttons • 8px cards • 12px badges
Hairlines	1px Rule • 3px Ink under section heads
Phone	one column under 760px; the margin notes fold in under the text

THE CURSORS

A pencil everywhere, its eraser end over anything crossed out, a red pen over the hire links. 32×32, hotspot at the tip. They are part of the joke: the visitor is holding the pen too.

06 • PARTS

The pieces the pages are built from.

a card is a card. not everything is a card.

PART	HOW IT IS MADE	WHERE IT GOES
Button	Ink fill, paper text, JetBrains Mono 14px, 17px / 22px padding, 4px radius.	Primary actions. One per view.
Ghost button	Same size, paper fill, 1px ink border.	Secondary actions: Previous, Back.
Pen link	Kalam 700 red, wavy red underline 1.5px, 7px offset.	The playful action: “Hire the pen”.
Margin note	Kalam 700 red 21px, rotated -1.5°, in the right-hand margin column.	Our commentary. Never load-bearing information.
Reader note	The same slot, in Reader blue, with a dotted rule under it.	What a visitor writes on our page. Stored in their browser, never ours.
Staff badge	Sheet card, ink band, square photo, serif role, mono ID line, department tag, barcode.	The team. Real job in the tag, joke in the title.
Index and reader	A list of pieces on the left, the piece itself on the right, arrow keys to move.	Any chapter with more than five pieces.
Client logo	The client’s own colours, no box, no grey-out, sized by visual weight rather than height.	Proof, not decoration.

06 • MOVEMENT

Nothing moves unless it is showing an edit.

WHAT	DURATION	EASING	HOW IT READS
The strike	0.52s	cubic-bezier(.65, 0, .35, 1)	A line drawn left to right through a word, as if by hand.
The write-in	0.9s, 0.6s after the strike	cubic-bezier(.2, .7, .2, 1)	The pen word appears left to right, revealed through a clip, never faded in.
The circle	0.7s, 1.55s in	cubic-bezier(.65, 0, .35, 1)	Drawn as one stroke around the word, slightly overshooting where it started.
Page change	150ms out, 420ms in, 560ms title reveal	cubic-bezier(.2, .7, .2, 1)	The open page lifts and drops away, the next slides up, its heading is wiped in.
Note inking	0.55s	ease	Margin notes fade and rise 6px as they scroll into view.
Client ticker	40s, endless	linear	Logos move left to right. Pauses on hover.
Dry mode	measured, then glided	cubic-bezier(.2, .7, .2, 1)	Jokes evaporate, then everything left glides to its new position. Nothing jumps.

THE RULE

Every animation on the site is a hand doing something: striking, writing, circling, ticking, turning a page. There is no sliding in for the sake of it, no parallax, no fade-ups on scroll except the notes inking in. If a movement cannot be explained as a pen or a page, it does not belong.

RESPECTING PEOPLE WHO DON'T WANT IT

When a visitor has reduced motion turned on, every animation is switched off and everything appears in its final state. The opening sequence is skipped entirely. Nothing is lost: the site is written to work still.

06 • DRY MODE

The whole brand, with the jokes removed.

What it is. A switch in the top bar. On, and every red mark, handwritten note, strike-through and joke heading evaporates; the layout then glides to close the gaps, holding the line the reader was on. What is left is the same site, said plainly.

Why it exists. Some people arrive in a hurry, and some arrive to check whether a funny agency can be serious. It answers both without an argument. It is also the test every new piece of copy has to pass.

Building new sections. Anything that is a joke gets marked as such so it can leave. Anything a client needs (a service, a price, a fact, a client's name) never carries a joke as its only wording. A visitor's own notes stay in both modes: they are not ours to switch off.

dry mode on. the jokes have left the building.

ACCESSIBILITY, KEPT

- Focus ring: 2px red, 3px offset, on everything reachable by keyboard.
- The chapters and the mail readers work with arrow keys.
- Every photograph and logo has a text description.
- Colour is never the only signal: a strike-through is also grey, a current item is also underlined.
- Reduced motion is honoured everywhere, including the opening.

META AND SHARING

Tab title • The Dry Text Co. | Content, marketing, advertising, branding and websites from Ahmedabad

Favicon • the caret, paper tile

Link preview • og-image.png, 1200×630